Death and Changing Rituals J. Rasmus Brandt,Hîkon Ingvaldsen,Marina Prusac,2014-07-31 The forms by which a deceased person may be brought to rest are as many as there are causes of death. In most societies the disposal of the corpse is accompanied by some form of celebration or ritual which may range from a simple act of deportment in solitude to the engagement of large masses of people in laborious and creative festivities. In a funerary context the term ritual may be taken to represent a process that incorporates all the actions performed and thoughts expressed in connection with a dying and dead person, from the preparatory pre-death stages to the final deposition of the corpse and the post-mortem stages of grief and commemoration. The contributions presented here are focused not on the examination of different funerary practices, their function and meaning, but on the changes of such rituals _ how and when they occurred and how they may be explained. Based on case studies from a range of geographical regions and from different prehistoric and historical periods, a range of key themes are examined concerning belief and ritual, body and deposition, place, performance and commemoration, exploring a complex web of practices.

Some Aerodynamic Properties of a 105mm Model of the 155mm T-358 Shell W. E. Scott,1961 The aerodynamic properties of a 105 mm model of the 155 mm T-358 shell are discussed. Subsonically, at small yaw, the model has a serious case of dynamic instability as indicated by a rapid divergence of the precessional component of yaw. It is shown that this instability is due to Magnus effects, and that these effects cannot be circumvented by firing at a different spin. However, because of past experience with similar shell, it is conjectured that this dynamic instability is a small yaw phenomenon and that a limit cycle is present. As a consequence of this, the dispersion will not be markedly affected.
