Multi-sensor Remote Sensing for Desertification Monitoring in the Dry Sub-humid Coastal Lowland of Vietnam Viet Anh Hoang,University of Newcastle upon Tyne. School of Civil Engineering and Geosciences,2011 Desertification, even though not a new problem, in recent years has become one of the major global threats widely recognized not only by research community but also by public interest. Traditionally, the term desert is typically used to refer to vast areas of sand dune spreading over thousands miles such as in the Sahara Desert, Africa. However, in the new concept of desertification as a degradation process, today we are facing a new trend of desertification in the sub-humid regions with an accelerating rate because of deforestation, poor agricultural land use practice and overgrazing. Mapping desertification in sub-humid areas, however, is difficult due to cloud cover, poor geo- database infrastructure and limited investment. Current desertification mapping techniques are primarily developed for arid regions and are inappropriate for sub-humid areas, both in terms of scale and ecosystem characterization. There is an obvious need for new monitoring approaches developed specifically for sub-humid areas, which utilize readily available Earth observation systems in a cost effective solution. The goal of this study is to develop an imagery-based mapping method that can be used to monitor desertification in sub-humid areas of Vietnam, which is transferable to areas with similar conditions in South East Asia. Specific objectives are: 1) to characterise the desertification process in sub- humid areas from a remote sensing perspective, 2) to develop a method for desertification mapping which combines advantages of several types of satellite imagery, thus overcoming the limitations in spatial, temporal and spectral resolution of individual satellite image systems, 3) to test and evaluate the new desertification mapping method in the coastal lowlands of Vietnam. In the first step, characterising the desertification, field surveys were conducted in the coastal lowland of Vietnam to understand the background of land processes: vegetation fluctuation in savannah landscape, land use patterns and human activities, land form and soil properties. Archived remote sensing data including Landsat, ASTER, MODIS, MERIS, and different types of SAR imagery were used to investigate the spatial and spectral responses of desertification surfaces. Through this step a set of remote sensing imagery most suitable for sub-humid desertification was selected. Next, different parameters extracted from remote sensing data and their relationships with desertification features were examined. Soil temperature and vegetation index were selected as the components required to develop the Vegetation Temperature Angle Index (VTAI) algorithm. These two parameters have strong relationships with the thermal dynamics of land processes and vegetation moisture stress, thus providing a simple yet robust representation of desertification land spectrum. The methods to extract these parameters are mature and have led to standard products being available from data providers, therefore making the implementation of the mapping method simple and comparable between geographic regions. In addition a method for rapid soil moisture estimation from SAR images was investigated. Soil moisture represents a direct and measurable indicator of dryness and therefore provides an additional dimension to verify the desertification index algorithm. The Vegetation Temperature Angle Index (VTAI), and soil moisture estimation method are evaluated in the coastal lowland of Vietnam using data from ASTER and MODIS, and ENVISAT ASAR imagery. In particular, the efficiency of the VT AI index in detecting the vegetation condition and soil water availability was investigated. The results indicate that the VT AI index is simple to construct and capable of discriminating different variation in vegetation and soil, effectively identifying vegetation stress, and is able to separate inactive vegetation from bare soil. At the same time, soil moisture estimation from SAR images can be used to verify the desertification index, and to provide a weather-independent monitoring method. The VTAI and soil moisture estimation was combined into the Vegetation Temperature Angle and Moisture (VT AMI) index. The new combined index showed improved performance compared to VT AI and produced reliable results across a wider range of land cover and surface conditions. A desertification risk class map of the study area was produced from the VT AMI index. From the results of the testing project, the elements required for effective monitoring and management of sub-humid desertification are discussed in terms of optimal remote sensing imagery and land process characteristics, in order to identify areas at risk of desertification.

Intraplate Magmatism and Metallogeny of North Vietnam Hoa Trong Tran,Gleb V. Polyakov,Anh Tuan Tran,Alexander S. Borisenko,Andrey E. Izokh,Pavel A. Balykin,Phuong Thi Ngo,Dung Thi Pham,2015-12-16 This book by Vietnamese and Russian authors is the first of its kind and combines the extensive knowledge on the petrology and metallogeny of the late Paleozoic – early Mesozoic and Cenozoic periods in North Vietnam. The Permian – Triassic and Paleogene volcano-plutonic and plutonic associations are two important geological events in the evolutionary history of Southeast Asia, including the 260 – 250 Ma Emeishan mantle plume and Indian-Eurasia collision at 60 – 55 M. The volume includes 9 chapters, divided into 3 parts. Part 1 introduces the geological structure of North Vietnam; Part 2 covers the Permian – Triassic magma associations and metallogeny; and Part 3 focuses on the Cenozoic magma associations and metallogeny. In each chapter, the geological setting of magmas, classification of different geological structures, and composition characteristics, such as mineralogy, geochemistry, isotope systematics and geochronology are discussed. This book represents an important reference document for international and Vietnamese geologists engaged in the geological history and metallogeny of Vietnam, an important area of the Asian continent. The monograph also has a practical significance in contributing new premises and to assess rare and precious mineral prospects. In addition, it can be regarded as a necessary data base for petrological and metallogenic projects and university courses.

VYEA FORTY YEARS Nhi-Anh Chu,2016-08-05 Commemorative Pictures and Essays about the Vietnamese Youth Educational Association of Washington D.C. -- VYEA, on occasion of its 40th year in operation. The Vietnamese Youth Educational Association of Washington, VYEA, was founded in 1977 in Arlington Virginia. VYEA's mission is to teach the Vietnamese language, promulgate the Vietnamese culture within American society and strengthen traditional values. VYEA has been operating a Vietnamese Summer School (L p HE Ti ng Vi t) for 40 years. This past Summer, the school met at Falls Church High school and received 345 students aged from 6 to 22 years, organized into 14 classes of 6 grade levels, taught by 45 volunteer teachers and supported by a large number of volunteer parents, and members of the VYEA. The school held classes in the six weeks immediately following the public school year. Since 2008, the Teaching Assistant program and the Popular Culture classes have added other colorful means of sharing the Viet heritage and culture to the children. In addition to the Viet language, students and teachers and parents all participated in school-wide cultural activities that culminated in a 2-hour show at the graduation day attended by more than 700 parents. Additional effort at promulgating Viet culture has taken form in a Viet Youth Orchestra 2005-2008, a 30-member symphonic orchestra played the HOn V ng Phu 1-3 songs and DAn Ca Ba Mi n (Folk Songs) Tr ng C m, LY Con SAo Hu and LY Ng a O. Love After War Wayne Karlin, Anh Thái Hồ,2003 How does the literature of a society that has endured decades of war reflect the echoes of that violence to bodies and spirits while depicting the ordinary lives of men and women who are searching, as all people do, for meaning, for happiness, for normalcy, for love? Love After War presents the widest range to date of contemporary writers in Vietnam, men and women who have become part of that country's established canon, as well as young and up-coming writers who have come of age in modern Vietnam. Their stories, published in the most widely read literary journals, magazines and newspapers in Vietnam, and many translated here for the first time, reveal the relationships and concerns of everyday life, and the erosion and endurance of life in that country. Contributors to the anthology include Vu Boa, Nguyen Minh Chau, Ngo Thi Kim Cuc, Nguyen Phan Hach, Ma Van Khang, Nguyen Khai, Le Minh Khue, Nguyen Thi Minh Ngoc, Bao Ninh, Doan Le, Ho Anh Thai, Nguyen Huy Thiep, Nguyen Manh Tuan and others.

Viet Nam Hữu Ngọc,2016-08-15 During his twenty-year tenure as a columnist for Việt Nam News, Hà Nội's English-language newspaper, Hữu Ngọc charmed and invigorated an international readership hungry for straightforward but elegant entrees into understanding Vietnamese culture. The essays were originally collected in the massive Wandering through Vietnamese Culture. With Viet Nam: Tradition and Change, Ohio University Press presents a selection from these many treasures, which are perfectly suited to students of Vietnamese culture and travelers seeking an introduction to the country's rich history, culture, and daily life. With extraordinary linguistic ability and a prodigious memory, Hữu Ngọc is among Việt Nam's keenest observers of and writers about traditional Vietnamese culture and recent history. The author's central theme—that all tradition is change through acculturation—twines through each of the book's ten sections, which contain Hữu Ngọc's ideas on Vietnamese religion, literature, history, exemplary figures, and more. Taken on its own, each brief essay is an engaging discussion of key elements of Vietnamese culture and the history of an issue confronting Việt Nam today.
