Immigration Beggar Denis Santos 2012-07 One day I felt like dying and wished I had never been born. Without week and alone, I sat in front of a bonfire that burned and liberated ashes blown away by the wind. On June 23, 1984, in the city of Salvador, Bahia, northeast Brazil, I had spent the day with my father, who the night before, was surprised by a cerebral hemorrhage that paralyzed the entire left side of his body, leaving him lying motionless on a bed. This was too much for me to handle since I still hadn't been able to get past my mother's death on March 27, 1983. Never before had I been so confused like I was that day. I was thirteen years old. That night I wore a white worn-out shirt and a pair of jeans that I had worn to school. I was sitting on my doorstep, so sad, as I watched my friends playing around (the bonfire on the night of the June festival), and I thought about everything. Everything, except that one day I would be an author and a movie director in the city of the stars of Hollywood so dreamed of by millions. Here I am, in the United States of America, twenty-seven years later, writing a script in order to start filming the story that inspired me. The story that is about a student, a policeman, and a beggar.

Pedro Mico Antonio Callado Autobiography of a Brown Buffalo Oscar Zeta Acosta 1989-07-17 Before his mysterious disappearance and probable death in 1971, Oscar Zeta Acosta was famous as a Robin Hood Chicano lawyer and notorious as the real-life model for Hunter S. Thompson's "Dr. Gonzo," a fat, pugnacious attorney with a gargantuan appetite for food, drugs, and life on the edge. Written with uninhibited candor and manic energy, this book is Acosta's own account of coming of age as a Chicano in the psychedelic sixties, of taking on impossible cases while breaking all tile rules of courtroom conduct, and of scrambling headlong in search of a personal and cultural identity. It is a landmark of contemporary Hispanic-American literature, at once ribald, surreal, and unmistakably authentic.

Papi Rita Indiana 2016-03-21 "Papi's there, around any corner," says the eight-year-old girl at the heart of Papi. "But you can't sit down and wait for him cuz that's a longer and more painful death." Living in Santo Domingo, she waits for her father to come back from the United States and lavish her with the glorious rewards of his fame and fortune—shiny new cars and polo shirts, gold chains and Nikes. But when Papi does come back, he turns out to be more "like Jason, the guy from Friday the 13th," than a prince. Papi is a drug dealer, a man who is clearly unreliable and dangerous but nevertheless makes his daughter feel powerful and wholly, terrifyingly alive.

Drawing on her memories of a childhood split between Santo Domingo and visits with her father amid the luxuries of the United States, Rita Indiana mixes satire with a child's imagination, horror with science fiction, in a swirling tale of a daughter's love, the lure of crime and machismo, and the violence of the adult world. Expertly translated into English for the first time by Achy Obejas, who renders the rhythmic lyricism of Indiana's Dominican Spanish in language that propels the book forward with the relentless beat of a merengue, Papi is furious, musical, and full of wit—a passionate, overwhelming, and very human explosion of artistic virtuosity.

Tarantula Juan Carlos Zambrana Gutiérrez 2021

La pluma de Juan Carlos Zambrana Gutiérrez trabaja la piel de sus personajes con la precisión de un tatuador experto. Los vestigios de una ferocidad apenas contenida afloran, de pronto, sobre la epidermis de un encargado de almacén, un soldado, un conductor de Uber. Los habitantes de estos relatos mudan de piel a través de rituales propios -un tatuaje, un viaje de cocaína, una enfermedad o la guerra misma-, que en la prosa de Zambrana Gutiérrez se constituyen en vehículos eficaces para la revelación. En otras ocasiones, para una metamorfosis completa, basta que uno de los protagonistas preste oído al golpeteo nocturno de la arena contra los vidrios y entorne una ventana. Desde esa rendija la noche irrumpirá, furtiva y letal, como una tarántula. Leni Flores, Escritora, editora de la Revista Temporales y maestrante de la New York University.--back cover.
